This year's Labor Day weekend falls between Friday, August 30, and Monday, September 2. Although there are many closed during this holiday - all government buildings, for example, are closed - much of New York remains open. There are plenty of activities from going to the beach to exploring museums. Shops and restaurants are in full swing (and they may be even less crowded than usual because the locals tend to leave the city). Also many city attractions will be launched and launched, ready to welcome you on this all American holiday. Every year, a Labor Day parade (also known as the West Indies Parade) is held in Crown Heights, Brooklyn. It celebrates the culture of the West Indies and includes food, performances, and elaborate costumes and displays. More than 600,000 people visit so arrive early to get a great viewing spot. You can learn more about the parade with this guide. There is also a Labor Day parade in Manhattan held on the second Saturday of September. It starts at 10 a.m. on 44th Street and continues up to 5th Avenue to 72nd Street. The go-to party might want to take a Labor Day cruise on a yacht where you can end the summer with a night of dancing on the Hudson River. It's also a great way to see New York as you can take in views of the Statue of Liberty, the Manhattan skyline, and more. You can buy tickets for sunset, party cruise online. New York parks and beaches are open during Labor Day, and many offer special events for the whole family. Brooklyn Bridge Park, for example, has free kayaking, park cleaning, walking tours, outdoor movies, and more. Check the schedule on the website. Hudson River Park, a 550-acre park along the west side of Manhattan on the Hudson River, also offers a variety of activities every day. There are outdoor movies, exercise classes, workshops, water sports, and more. Check the schedule here. New York beaches are open during Labor Day. They will be very crowded so come early to get a good place. Jacob Riis Beach offers free music starting at noon. New York city also has a variety of public pools that are open on Labor Day. They will also be packed (New Yorkers return to school immediately after Labor Day, so this is the last chance to soak up the sun), so consider arriving later in the day or very early to be first in the water. Outdoor pools are open from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m., with a cleaning break from 3 p.m. to 4 p.m. Since the weather will be warm consider moving to one of New York's outdoor attractions. On the governor's island you can explore the old army barracks. You can find in the Hammak park, rent bikes or try new food and drink on the food court. There's even a brewery. Another attraction is Coint Island. This sidewalk Both for its beach and for the amusement park on it. Don't miss the shark exhibit, where toddlers can crawl through tunnels under ferocious creatures. The Metropolitan Museum of Art is open on Day. This summer, the museum launched a new food and drink program on its rooftop, offering homemade ice cream and natural popsicles, paved with champagne. There is also art on the roof where you can catch a view of Central Park. It's the perfect place to close summer. The National History Museum is also a good place to spend your holidays. The Discovery Room, where children can dig fossils and play games related to the natural world, will open extra hours in the morning for public holidays. Many New York stores celebrate Labor Day with sales, where you can buy summer clothes at a big discount, even 80 percent. Large department stores (such as Bloomingdales, Macy's and Saks Fifth Avenue) all offer extensive sales. If you don't have a specific store in mind consider wandering around Soho or winding down Fifth Avenue looking for signs of sale in storefronts. You can also check individual websites to find out what's on offer. All government buildings, from post offices to libraries, are closed on Labor Day. While banks are not required to close on federal holidays many do, giving their employees time. If you need to do something with the cashier, make sure you get it done before Monday. ATMs will be available on Labor Day in case you need to pull out the money. While New York trains and buses will run during Labor Day, many lines will run on a more limited schedule and some trains will be rerouted. Before you travel, check Google Maps or the MTA website to make sure your itinerary is working. Thank you for letting us know! Outstanding performance is one of the keys to personal and professional success, which I discuss in a direct conversation about success. If you want to become an outstanding performer you need to do three things. 1) Stay on top of your game by becoming a lifelong learner. 2) Set and achieve high goals. 3) Organize. Manage your time, life and stress well. If you read this blog with any regularity, you know that I'm a big fan of SUCCESS Magazine. I read it cover to cover every month - and keep it as a reference. See last Friday's blog post to get an idea of how much I appreciate the ideas in SUCCESS. If you haven't subscribed yet, I suggest you go to www.success.com do it right now. The May 2009 success issue has a large piece of Earl Nightingale called 30 Days of Testing. I remember listening to Mr. Nightingale when I was a kid. I really enjoyed his radio show Our Changing World. He had such a great voice and told such great stories. Here's an example of his common-sense approach to life and success since 1956... I want you to do a test that will last 30 days. It won't be easy. If you give it a good try, it will completely change your life for the better. First of all, I want you have written on the map that this is what you want more than anything in the world. Make sure it's a common goal and clearly defined. You don't have to show it to anyone, but carry it with you, so you can look at on several times a day. Think about it in a fun, relaxed, positive way every morning when you get up and immediately you have something to work on, something to get out of bed, something to live with. Look at this every chance you get during the day and before bed at night. As you look at it, remember that you have to become what you think about, and since you think about your goal, you will understand that soon it will be yours. Every time a terrible or negative thought comes into your consciousness, replace it with a mental picture of your positive and worthwhile purpose. Within 30 days, you have to take control of your mind. He will only think about what you let him think. Every day for this 30-day test, do more of what you have to do. In addition to keeping a cheerful, positive outlook, give yourself more than you ever did before. Do this knowing that your return to life must be in direct proportion to what you give. I love this tip because it comes in two parts. 1) Visualize your goal. 2) Work is very difficult to achieve it. Too many people are great at visualizing parts and not so great on the hard work part. You need both - and probably more hard work - if you want to succeed. Earl Nightingale got it. I hope you do, too. The sense of common sense here is simple. Successful people are outstanding performers. Outstanding performers set and achieve high goals. Good goals are very specific and measurable. They focus on one achievement. Your goals should become a part of you. Carry them with you. Think of them first thing in the morning, the last thing at night and several times during the day. Thinking about your goals will help motivate you to put in a while and effort to achieve them. A well-stated goal is a great start, but it is hard work that will ultimately lead to achieving your goals. There are no two ways about this. You have to do the job if you want to achieve your goals. This is my take on Earl Nightingale's 30-day challenge. What's yours? Please leave a comment sharing your thoughts with us. As always, you have my deepest and most sincere gratitude for reading. Bad 1hr 30min by car, 2 hours by train City of New Hope stretches along the banks of the Delaware River, with a peaceful promenade as opposed to a lively crowd of creative and counterculture types, from hippies to bikers, but best of all? Its vintage games are strong, and refreshingly inexpensive- and artists, mostly transplants from New York, have opened boutiques like Thirteen, with a rocker-girl mix of strands for less than $150, with plenty of me-with-group statement pieces like leather shorts and skull print dresses. Heads up! We work hard to be precise - but these are unusual times, so please always check before you set off. Photograph: Marieel Solan Day Parade 2014 You don't need to be Irish to celebrate St Patrick's Day (and you certainly don't need to green beer). That's the beauty of celebrating in York City. From the annual St Paddy's Day parades to pubs and live music, the Big Apple is home to joyous celebrations splashed out in green. If partying isn't your scene, there's still a lot to do with both having a genuine Irish cooking class and learning all about how Irish immigrants live here during the 19th century. Either way, get ready to belt your favorite drinking songs, bust out limerick and show off your shamrock-Day St. Patrick's Day in New York will be a blast!
